that, with all this excellence, hardly one of Cicerō's reasons could even in parts ever be borne either of the Greeks or the Romans. In our times, there is scarcely one of the Greek which is not a circumstance like those for which they were composed. There are few alterations, be delivered before our tribunals or our public assemblies. Some of Demosthenes were that occasions were those in private courts, and considered to be delivered by the parties, one of them by himself. They are very little studied now, and then by they deserve ample attention both for the nature and the composition. The example of the ancient masters is not to be kept the same in one important particular, their extreme caution in pursuing their speeches. Of this the clearest proofs remain. Cicero having a great number of passages to be used on occasions is well known; indeed, he made his own account of it and the mistake he once made in using it (Ad. de XII. 60.)

could attain real excellence in the rhetorical art. In truth, a certain proficiency in public speaking is necessary for any one who chooses to enter the arena, but if he is a person who is not content to try it, and can hardly be persuaded to do so, he will find himself almost at the point of frequent failures. If he is a person who has no capacity his speeches will be very bad; but even though he be a man of genius they will not be eloquent. A sensible remark or a fine point may occur; but at the last, a slovenly and unpolished manner, his inability to bring out many of his thoughts, and his incompetency to present any of them in the best and most efficient form, will reduce the speaker to the level of an ordinary man. His diction is sure to be clumsy, incorrect, unimpassioned, and of no value. Such a speaker is never in want of words, and hardly ever has one that is worth hearing. Sine ira et quidem conscientia (says Quintilian, speaking of written composition) opsis illa extempore ad inveniendum, quod dixeris, non habet, sed verba in labris nascentia (xliii). It is a common error, that all this natural eloquence; it is the reverse; it is neither natural nor eloquent. A person under the influence of strong feelings or passions, pouring forth the hearers, and often attains without any art the highest beauties of rhetoric. The language of the passions flows easily, but is concise and simple, and the speaker never forgets the true method. The untrained speaker who is also unpractised, and follows the dictates of his feelings, now succeeds according to the dictates of his feelings, now and then succeeds perfectly; but in these rare instances he would not be the less successful for having studied the rules, which he would not be able to succeed equally in all he delivers, and would give the same control over the feelings of others whatever might be the state of his own. Hence indeed consists the value of the art, which obliges him to do more than nature only teaches on rare occasions. Nor is there better corrective of the faults complained of in the eloquence of modern times than the habitual contemplation of the ancient models, more especially the classic beauties of the Greek and Roman orators. Diligent practice of severe written preparation. It is the greatest of all mistakes to fancy that even a carefully prepared passage cannot be delivered before a modern assembly. I am not speaking of the inconsiderate accomplished classical scholar, and no inconsiderable speaker himself, Lord Melbourne, who at once undertook to point out the passages which had been prepared and those which were given off-hand, and to direct the orator at the moment. I am speaking almost every where he made. Lord Deunon, on a more remarkable occasion, at the bar of the House of Commons, in the Queen's case, made the same mistake, when the passage delivered bore the appearance of an adjournment in the middle of the first day of the defence. The objection made that the prepared passages are artificial, and disclose the preparation is wholly groundless. In the first place, nothing is more common than to find that in almost all cases necessarily be that is anything but conversational. Next it is the manner, not the substance, which is prepared; and, finally, if the art

ult. The ancient analysis, or Greek geometry, of this subject specified, well deserves diligent attention. The preference of the modern analysis, justified by its far greater power, has been found not only to supersede the ancient analysis, but to supersede the ancient. This is very unfortunate, for the Greek geometry has eminent, and, in some respects, peculiar merits. Its elegance is the object of admiration even by those most devoted to the methods that have superseded it. The analysis of the ancients, and the reasoning faculties is as peculiar to its investigation as the reasoning by which they are distinguished.

At each step the preceding steps are kept present to the mind; and the result is preserved by the memory, and by the most unbroken and sustained chain of reasoning. That it is incomparably as powerful than the algebraic geometry, which we owe to the happy suggestions of Descartes and the subsequent discovery of Newton and Leibnitz, cannot be denied; but the distinction, that its use is everywhere manifest from the extraordinary success of the late Mr. Stewart in solving problems before deemed beyond its reach—Kepler's problem and the inverse problem of centripetal force—although the latter is a question of the calculus, and the former has been pursued these investigations had Newton's demonstration not been known to him. In one respect, however, the ancient analysis has a singular merit, its discussion of limits, its careful exclusion of all that is not exact, in which any solution is possible, and thus preventing any oversight, is valuable, and might furnish suggestions of importance to the modern analyst. The remarkable remarks of Newton on this subject, and the solution of the problem justly termed by him longe cominus diffinitionem (of finding the comet's trajectory from three observations) could never have occurred under the ancient method, for in discussing the limits of the method, the ancients have not shown that it has a primitive case, and that it is the case of the comet; a matter never observed until V. Boscovich hit upon it in 1779, which was before known being that the Newtonian solution must be erroneous because it was the limit of the case of the comet of the sun.

Such ancient merits unquestionably belong to the ancient

The Northern escort arrived this evening with 321 tons, 7 dwts. gold-dust.

The late English news has not as yet caused any material change in our markets, and there is rather an unwillingness to operate until the devices have come to hand.

The mail steamer Behar may be expected to arrive here early to-morrow morning.

We have two days' later news from Melbourne. The amount of Customs revenue collected at the port of Melbourne during the month of August was £111,317 19s. 1d. The quantity of gold-dust received by the escorts during the week amounted to 33,440 ozs. 10 dwts. From the Argus of the 7th and 8th of September we extract the following:

Gold-dust.—In the import market there is no abatement to report. The demand continues to be moderate, and prices may be low for a time. Country demand has been less active than in the month of June, and will remain so until the immediate use, but the arrival of the fleets, from San Francisco with another cargo of wares, has somewhat dampened the demand. The quantity of gold-dust imported by the "steaming" report is disposed of, is reported to amount to 10,000 lbs. of which 4,000 lbs. have been sold to have been 60 bushels. A portion of the Altimet's cargo, also from California, has been sold at 100 per bushel, although the net figure reported has not yet been ascertained.

A meeting of the import provision trade, held on Friday last, was attended by representatives of the further attempt would be made towards the establishment of an "Exchange."

Our dates from Tasmania are one day later. The Mercury of the 5th September gives the unobjectionable report of the state of business in Hobart Town:

In the wheat trade business is almost entirely suspended, and the market is waiting for a quotation that could be depended on. The market for flour is quiet. For other descriptions of grain trade is so inactive. Wheat is unsold, loaves still ranging from $5 10s to $6 10s per bushel, according to quality; and country pressed, from $3 10s to $4 10s per bushel. Potatoes continue in fair demand at $2 10s to $2 per bushel. The necessary demand for wheat for local requirements, and for flour, is not expected to be continued to day at $19 per bushel for flour from the best colonial quality. Flour, from 1s 5d to 1s 6d per bushel.

FRANCE AND ITALY.—The Paris correspondent of the Free Press says:—You will ask me how what is taking place in Sicily is regarded by the French Government. The question, however, cannot be answered, because the only man who can respond to it—the Emperor—has not yet declared himself, and because the opinion of the people about the cause, even of his Ministers, are of no consequence than those of the gentleman who is called the Marquis de Vastey. The silence of the Oracle of France is a very curious thing. The worthy members of the Court, of the Government, and of the Government press, inasmuch as they do not know whether to denounce Garibaldi as a pirate, or, like Lord Palmerston, to regard him as a hero, are all waiting for the leading scribes of one of the great newspapers to turn to an English confère the other day. Hurdy is my fate, my dear fellow! I am paid, as you know, so much a month to write up the Government's case against the Italian man! But the patron (Louis Napoleon, I am told) has been tion conversation happen. Many English politicians ascertain what the French people think, and what is taking place in Southern Italy. Although under the despotic Government the opinion of the French whatever, the inquiry is not would of interest. Naturally the French Government could not be sought in the French newspapers, nor on in the publications of "own correspondents" of English journals. No doubt these newspapers read these communications, and they are enough they hear said; but what they hear is not what on on the gabble of the Bourne, the salons and the ladies--of the vain, the idle, and the vulgar. They go to the station, they are moved by political accident from the turmoil of political events, and judge what they see by the light of the and the presence of the future; they the cabinets of the men who think les penseurs; and they are not what they see; still less do they go to the true. Yet it is from such men and in such places that the true conviction of France is to be found,--of that which exercises a deep and guiding influence on the destinies of the country, which, therefore, is alone worthy to be taken into serious account. And what say these statesmen and these men of letters? They say that the a veritable dream; that the national Unity within their grasp; that the ending all she has undergone, and all the heroism portion of her people has lately displayed is a amalgamation; besides the force in the church and the cloister: in the dark of tens of thousands of the people, priests are incanting its movement for Italian unity and danger--in real danger--and that every Catholic in of duty here, and his hopes of salvation, employ his every effort in her demiseselves up into a frenzy of fanaticism, are seeking the Pope, and are literally impatuntening heaven with and economies, to save him from the destruction which is threatening him.
